Foreword

This is the 8th Irish Not-for-Profit Sector: Fundraising Performance Report prepared by 2into3. It provides a comprehensive overview of a representative sample of not-for-profit organisations and insights into their activities and experiences, especially in relation to fundraising.

Charitable giving remains a significant source of income and has risen for the seventh consecutive year in 2016. Still, Ireland continually falls well short of the U.K. in per capita giving and in giving as a percentage of GDP. This report compares Ireland's giving culture to that of the U.K. and U.S. Ireland's per capita giving was also lower when compared to countries that are similar in GDP and population, Norway and New Zealand.

This report estimates the total amount of fundraised income or philanthropy in Ireland in 2016 and includes the funding model of the sector and of each subsector. The report also takes into account the continuously evolving size of the sector, in light of the Charities Regulator's registered list of charities and the Benefacts database, which provides a strong foundation from which research on the sector can grow.

We aim, with this report, to stimulate debate, discussion, and reflection, and to motivate civic and private stakeholders to support the efforts of the sector in continuing to enhance fundraising performance.

Irish society is both shaped by and mirrored in the not-for-profit sector; its values, ideals and issues of greatest precedence are reflected in volunteers' many hours of dedication and millions of euro donated to Ireland's almost 20,000 not-for-profit organisations.

Individuals and families engage with the sector on a daily basis. Whether promoting social justice and equality, encouraging participation in Sport, entertaining and contributing beauty to our surroundings, or providing essential Health and Social Services to the public, the not-for-profit sector shapes Irish life, forming a fundamental aspect of society.

In spite of this, a lack of systematic research continues to threaten the Irish not-for-profit sector's ability to perform at capacity. The scarcity of information reported by the sector hinders its ability to rebuild public trust, stifling progress. Policymakers arrive at decisions informed by estimates, while CEOs and fundraising managers are unable to benefit from knowledge sharing and best practice of similar organisations. Despite ongoing discussions surrounding increased accountability and transparency, there remains a great need for an evidence-based approach to substantiate strategic developments.

This report aims to bridge the knowledge gap by providing insight into the not-for-profit sector's composition and overall status in 2016, particularly in terms of philanthropic activities, performance and cost. We aim to provide objective information, to stimulate debate and discussion within and among organisations, and to encourage deeper analysis of the sector, which serves such a vital function in Irish society.

There have been notable advancements in the regulation of the sector. The Charities Regulator was established in 2014 as Ireland's statutory response to the Charities Act 2009. The Regulator's key function is to ensure the accountability of charities to their donors, beneficiaries and the public by maintaining a public register of charitable organisations operating in Ireland and ensuring their compliance with the Charities Acts. At the end of 2016, 9,061 charities were listed on the Register of Charities, a 13% increase from 2015. 2016 saw a substantial number of concerns raised about charities by the public, staff and volunteers (Charities Regulator, 2016), which suggests a growing awareness of the Regulator's function and a greater expectation by the public and members of organisations in a more transparent and accountable sector.

The Charities Regulator issued Guidelines for Charitable Organisations Fundraising from the Public in 2017. In the same year, a consultative panel was established on the governance of charitable organisations in accordance with section 36 of the Charities Act 2009. The function of this panel was to make recommendations on a regulatory standard of governance of Irish charities (Charities Regulator, 2018). The Charities Regulator will establish mandatory reporting closely resembling Financial Standard 102 to further increase accountability and transparency (Benefacts, 2017).

At present, organisations with charitable status are expected to adhere to the Guidelines for Charitable Organisations Fundraising from the Public and the Governance Code for the Community and Voluntary Sector. Only 541 organisations are compliant with the Governance Code and 1,458 are on the journey to adoption. While charities are overly burdened by reporting and compliance from multiple funders, best practice recommends adopting the 'triple lock' standards of transparent reporting, good fundraising and governance.

Knowledge on the size of the sector is now more in-depth as a result of the Charities Regulator list of registered charities and the Benefacts database. The sample selected for this report is based on the adjusted classification and size of the sector as per Benefacts. This report is therefore not directly comparable to previous reports in this series.

In this study, a process of stratified random sampling is used to better depict the not-for-profit landscape in Ireland. This involves splitting the population of organisations into subsectors and taking a separate random sample from each of the subsector rather than a single random sample from the entire population. When extrapolated, the relative size of each subsector is the same in both the sample and the population. Stratified sampling offers several advantages over simple random sampling, specifically it:

- Provides greater precision than a simple random sample of the same size
- Guards against an "unrepresentative" sample
- Provides sufficient sample sizes to support separate analyses of each subsector
- Ensures better coverage of the population than simple random sampling

A database provided by Benefacts was used when randomly selecting the total population by subsector, determining how many organisations from each category should be included in the sample. Once the population was split into its component strata, listed organisations were systematically selected for inclusion in the sample. Organisations selected were then checked for available financial information and obtained from the Benefacts database and Vision-net.

A sample of 10% of organisations was used for subsectors with a sufficient number of available accounts. In the remaining sectors, a sample of 5% or 3% was used. The total sample size then equates to 1,249 organisations or 6.3% of the total not-for-profit sector. The sample used in this report, when extrapolated, mirrors the proportional representation of not-for-profit sector.

Extracting key data on fundraised income and cost is still very challenging. Annual accounts were not compiled with the intention of inclusion in this report's analysis, and in many cases very limited information on fundraising is provided. While organisations are increasingly including fundraised income as a line item in accounts under 'donations', many organisations present income in a more aggregate format or combine sources of funding (e.g. 'income from Events and Corporate Donations') or subsume fundraised income under another heading.

To provide more detailed information on fundraising mix and cost, a second smaller sample of 24 organisations is included. These organisations responded to a survey and are anonymous. Unless explicitly stated otherwise, the figures presented in the report are from the main sample.

SORP Standards

Filing of abridged accounts increased to nearly 40%, while SORP compliance saw little growth.

Despite continued efforts towards a more transparent sector, 38% of organisations filed abridged accounts in 2016, up from 27% in 2015 (Benefacts, 2018:14). Of these organisations, Benefacts reports that 51% of the Recreation & Sport sector filed abridged accounts, 43% of Arts, Culture and Media and 42% of Development & Housing. As per accounts filed in 2016, International, Health, and the Arts, Culture and Media sectors led in SORP compliance, though only 8% of all organisations reported to SORP standards.

Sample Overview

The not-for-profit sector comprises 12 subsectors, as identified by Benefacts. The sample used in this report mirrors the proportional representation of the sector by applying the stratified random sampling technique in the selection of organisations and extrapolating to reflect the relative size of each subsector.

As outlined below, Education continues to dominate the sector, accounting for over a quarter of all organisations in Ireland, followed by Recreation & Sport (16%) and Development & Housing (15%). The remaining subsectors are made up of a small number of organisations.

Sample Size:1249

Income

Education & Research dominates in both size and income. Health is small in size but significant in income.

Education & Research dominates the sector, accounting for 26% of the total population and 32% of total income. Health represents a small proportion of organisations present within the sector, accounting for 4% of the entire population. However, Health organisations make up 10% of the sector's income.

Recreation & Sport represents 16% of the population but only 10% of total income. Education & Research, Health and Recreation & Sport all present variances between income and size. Advocacy, Law & Politics and International in particular have the closest relationship between income and size.

Income

Over half of organisations have income less than €250,000.

59% of organisations had an income below €250,000 with over 30% reporting income below €50,000. This finding is consistent with that of Indecon, noting that in 2016 over half of charities reported income below €250,000 (2018:13). As seen in Figure 5, only 13% of organisations had income of €1,000,000 or more, and 2% reported an income of €10,000,000 or more.

The average income for organisations in 2016 was €1,204,562, though just 12% of organisations reported income above the average figure. The median, however, was far lower, at €162,673, indicating that a number of large organisations inflated the average income level. There is a clear disparity between the lowest and highest income brackets within the not-for-profit sector, with a number of particularly small and very large organisations featuring in this sample. This corresponds with the finding that about 80% of income was accounted for by the top 3% of organisations (Indecon, 2018:13).

The total income of the not-for-profit sector is not yet known. Benefacts cite that the total income figure of the sector of which data is available totals €12.1 billion in 2016, an increase from €10.9 billion in 2015. According to Indecon, though, the total income of registered charities totals €14.5 billion (Indecon, 2018: 9).

Funding Model

Fundraising accounted for 6% of the sector's funding model.

Income in the not-for-profit sector is categorised into three sources: state, earned and fundraised income. This funding model, however, is subject to great variation when broken down by subsector as well as by organisation size. The funding model for the sector is presented in Figure 6. State funding formed the majority source of income at 57%, while fundraised income accounted for 6%. Earned income, composed of activities such as ticket sales, rent and investment income, generated 35% of total income.

There is considerable variation in funding between subsectors. Social Services and Health organisations deliver a wide variety of services for the state, receiving 80% and 74% of their funding from this source, respectively. For Professional & Vocational and Recreation & Sport, earned income made up 80% and 68% of their funding models. Philanthropy & Voluntarism organisations, which include foundations, received only 7% of their income from the state, but saw fundraising comprise 87% of their funding model. Religious organisations were similar, sourcing 80% of their income from fundraising and just 5% from the state.

The funding models for each subsector can be found on pages 8-10. Below, subsectors are grouped based on their dominant source of funding.

State Income

State Income accounted for 57% of total income, an increase of 5%, when compared to 2015.

In 2016, state income accounted for 57% of total income, which indicates a high reliance on not-for-profit organisations to deliver necessary services. This is evident with Social Services and Health which continually receive proportionally more state income than other subsectors, while Religion, followed by Philanthropy & Voluntarism received the smallest state contributions.

In 2016, state income saw a year-on-year increase of 5%. Greater changes are found, however, when looking at subsectoral trends. Religion recorded an increase of 99% in state income as a proportion of total income. This increase is attributable to one outlier, and once removed, state income decreases by 6% for this subsector. Recreation & Sport saw an increase of 8% in funding, while Social Services' state funding rose by 12%. Arts, Culture & Media's state funding increased by 11%, largely due to Arts Council grants.

State support is recovering; however, the funding landscape is changing with the implementation of the Public Service Reform Plan (2014-2016) towards a 'new approach based on releasing funds in return for delivering specified outcomes' (DPER, 2014:15). After public consultation on commissioning in 2016, the Department of Public Expenditure and Reform has drafted a definition of commissioning and guiding principles on its approach. The Department is now working towards aligning and integrating this approach with existing expenditure policy (DPER, 2017).

Staff

Staffing levels increased by 3%, yet nearly half of organisations employ 5 staff or less.

48% of organisations employed 5 or less staff in 2016, as outlined in the chart below. Organisations with more than 50 members of staff totalled 9%. Of organisations in the sample, 5% had more than 100 staff.

Disparity in the sector was also found with regards to staffing levels. On average, organisations employed 26 staff members, over four times the median of 6. 84% of organisations had staff levels below the identified average.

Religious organisations received 19c of every €1 raised in Ireland, in 2016.

Both nationally and internationally, Ireland is viewed as having a highly generous population, consistently ranking highly in the World Giving Index. Ireland moved up one ranking to the 8th most generous nation, but for the first time, dropped out of the top 10 countries for donating money. The percentage of Irish people who donated to charity in the past month dropped from 66% in 2015 to 60% in 2016 (Charities Aid Foundation, 2017: 20).

As stated in the methodology, many sets of accounts are abridged or income is provided in aggregate. The result is that fundraised income and its sources are underreported. Only a small number of organisations in our sample provided additional information. It is on this small group that this analysis is carried out. As such, the results are no longer necessarily representative of the experiences of the entire sector.

As illustrated in Figure 11, Religion received 19c of every €1 raised in 2016, while Education organisations received 18c of every €1. Environment organisations only contributed 1% of total fundraised income, while Professional & Vocational, Recreation & Sport and Advocacy, Law & Politics each received 2%.

Sample Size: 535

Fundraised income by method is underreported.

The not-for-profit sector relies on a variety of fundraising methods, including Direct Mail, Local and Community Fundraising including Events, soliciting Major Gifts, Regular and Committed Giving, Corporate Donations and Selling Something. As equally varied are the skills, time commitment and investment required to implement each method. Each organisation must identify the range of fundraising techniques that are best aligned to their funding targets and resources, measured in terms of overall income. The fundraising mix is influenced both by subsector and an organisation's purpose.

For the 535 organisations with available data, a total of 835 observations on fundraised income by method were found. The most cited method was 'donations', accounting for just over 30% of all observations. Many organisations included an income line on 'fundraising' but provided no additional detail. Others provided detail on methods used but combined income from more than one source, for example, Corporate Donations and Events. This results in an inability to disaggregate income by method. This unspecified fundraised income accounted for 24% of reporting. There was a high level of observations for Trusts and Foundation income, at 13%. Organisations typically named the Trust or Foundation or were more explicit when reporting on this form of income. Similar was found with Corporate Donations, at 10%.

While annual accounts provide detail on fundraised income totals, there is a lack of available information to identify the fundraising mix of the sector using this approach, due to inconsistencies and underreporting.

Relationship fundraising forms the majority of fundraised income.

In order to provide a more detailed analysis of the fundraising mix, a survey of 24 organisations was conducted. Figure 13 then illustrates a more detailed picture of the fundraising mix of the sector compared to what can be reported from annual accounts.

Regular Giving (34%) and Direct Marketing Appeals (20%) dominate the fundraising mix. Divergence from more traditional fundraising methods is clear as Local/Community Fundraising accounted for 9% of total receipts, while Selling Something represented 8%. Relationship fundraising methods total 55% of receipts.

The level of diversity in the sector in relation to size and use of fundraising methods can result in one organisation skewing the overall findings. A systematic approach to gathering evidence on the fundraising landscape is required to inform and benchmark effectiveness. Presently, the knowledge gap between Ireland and the U.K. surrounding the voluntary sector has narrowed as a result of Benefacts. However, there remain gaps in sectoral knowledge on the Irish fundraising landscape. This was acknowledged in the Critical Fundraising Report (Murphy, 2017) in which task group members advocated for more evidence-informed fundraising decision making, including participation in benchmarking to share information regarding and insights on fundraising performance.

Fundraised Income: International Comparisons

Ireland received a similar proportion of income from individuals to that of the U.S.

Individual Donations dominate the U.S. fundraising mix. According to the recent Giving U.S.A. report, individual donations made up 72% of U.S. contributions in 2016.

Individual donations also heavily represent the U.K. fundraising mix, totalling £10.9 billion in 2016, with legacies totalling £3.1 billion (National Council for Voluntary Organisations, 2018).

When compared to Figure 15, similarities between the Irish fundraising mix and that of the U.S. and U.K. emerge. However, with 15% of fundraised income the U.S. and U.K received through Foundations and only 1% being attributed to this method in Ireland, it is clear that giving cultures vary notably.

Fundraised income increased by 4.5% in 2016.

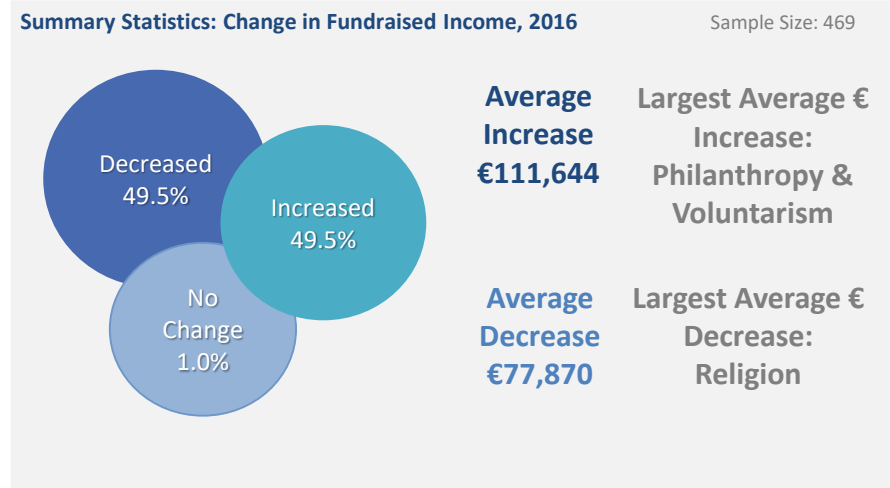

In 2016, fundraised income experienced an average increase of 4.5%. As outlined in the summary statistics table, organisational and subsectoral differences vary greatly. An even split was found between organisations experiencing an increase or decrease in fundraised income. The average monetary increase, however, outweighs the average decrease, resulting in an overall upward trend.

Figure 17 shows that Philanthropy & Voluntarism had the largest average increase of €120,200 per organisation, while the largest average decrease was experienced by Religion. A sector that experienced minimal change was Social Services, which decreased by only €1,859 per organisation on average.

Despite challenges in public perception of charities faced by the sector, an increase in fundraised income was observed in 2016. Amárach found that 15% of survey respondents had ‘no trust at all’ in Irish charities, an increase of 5% compared to 2015. Those having trust in charities fell from 9% to 5%, indicating that despite attempts at increased transparency in the sector, ‘public trust has not recovered from recent scandals’ (2017:25). Boss (2015) found however that organisations with good governance and transparency are in a better position to respond to scandals and subsequently experienced minimal consequences. These organisations focused on improving governance, strengthening donor trust and donor retention approaches.

Expenses related to fundraising are continually and significantly underreported, making it difficult to construct a detailed breakdown of fundraising costs using the main cohort of organisations. The sector recognises that increased transparency is essential to regaining public trust, but despite being outwardly accepting of the need for regulation, organisations remain hesitant in reporting on administrative, overhead, and fundraising costs. This is in part due to the unrealistic expectations surrounding the staff and running costs of a charity by State funders and the general public (Amárach, 2017).

As 2018 draws to a close, the sector still awaits the introduction of a mandatory financial reporting standard by the Charities Regulator. The adoption of charities SORP is ‘fundamental to restoring trust in charities’ (Benefacts, 2017) and would increase the sector’s accountability and transparency by making available information on how donations are spent, as well as the costs of fundraising.

Zero fundraising costs are an illusion that threatens the efficacy of the sector. While low costs regarding fundraising and management are preferable, organisational efficiency, effectiveness and sustainability cannot be attained without a sufficient level of investment in overheads and staff. Moreover, organisations struggle to recruit and retain capable staff as a result of external pressure placed on them by a general public that believes charities should hire the best professionals but reject the notion of competitive wages for this professionalism (Amárach, 2017: 17). Low fundraising and staff costs are not related to efficiency; indeed, the opposite can be said, that insufficient funding allocations for administration and overheads hinder the ability of organisations to build capacity.

More practical limitations of the summary ‘cost to raise a euro’ measure include:

- Poor quality data is available from annual accounts
- Organisational fundraising outcomes are not explicitly fundraising activities i.e. media based raising awareness
- Large annual fluctuations of fundraised income and investment results in figures that may not be representative of an organisation’s actual position
- Fundraising costs are correlated with a range of organisational characteristics including size, cause, capacity and age

In 2016, 24 organisations gave detailed information on their cost to raise €1, allowing 2into3 to estimate the costs associated with the various fundraising methods.

While the portion of organisations providing detailed information on fundraising costs is low, it still allows 2into3 to provide a reasonable depiction of the sector’s experiences. Even so, this cost is an estimate based on a small, non-random sample and should therefore be viewed with caution.

Fundraising Costs

In 2016, it cost 31c to raise €1, with Legacies generating significant return on investment.

Sample Size:24

The cost of Fundraising varies across different techniques, and in 2016 the average cost to raise €1 was 31c. Selling Something was the most costly method requiring 94c to raise €1. Endowments and Legacies were found to be the most cost effective methods, followed by Emergency Direct Marketing Appeals.

As previously outlined, the fundraising landscape in Ireland differs to that of the U.K. These differences are even more apparent when compared to the U.S. Therefore, while international costs of fundraising are illustrated below, the fundraising landscape and therefore the related costs are not directly comparable with Ireland.

31c invested = €1 raised in Ireland

24p invested = £1 raised in U.K. (NCVO, 2015)

23c invested = $1 raised in U.S. (Giving USA, 2017)

Estimated GDP and Per Capita Equivalent

Ireland continues to lag behind the U.K. and U.S. in per capita giving and when compared to a similar counterpart, New Zealand.

The extrapolated sample of this report is representative of the not-for-profit sector in 2016, and can, therefore, depict the overall sectoral experience. In our effort to ensure the best representation of the sector, the top 2% of this cohort was removed from the extrapolation. Figures presented in this part of the report should be viewed with some caution due to underreporting and a lack of information particularly surrounding this form of income. With these caveats in place, it is estimated that in 2016, fundraised income for the Irish not-for-profit sector totalled €1 billion. Indecon (2018) identified fundraised income for registered charities as €965m.

This report estimates that Ireland’s fundraised income formed 0.33% of Irish GDP in 2016, with a per capita rate of giving of €212, €183 lower than that of the U.K. Comparisons between giving in New Zealand and in Ireland can be made due to the similarity in population and GDP. New Zealand’s most recent data shows per capita giving at €386, with an estimated total of €1.74 billion in philanthropic giving in 2014. New Zealand has a highly developed culture of strategic giving, with voluntary and statutory trusts and foundations accounting for 42% of total giving (Philanthropy New Zealand, 2014:ii).

The publication of The European Research Network on Philanthropy’s (ERNOP) longitudinal study covering 20 European countries points to shortcomings in Ireland’s reporting on giving, noting a very low-bound estimate and overall low availability of data (ERNOP, 2018). Compared to one of Ireland’s closer European counterparts in population and GDP, Norway, per capita giving is lower, with Norwegians giving an average of €180. Even so, giving in Norway is more strategic, with giving through trusts and foundations accounting for 41% of philanthropy (Sivesind, 2018).

Summary Statistics: Per Capita Giving, 2016

Per Capita Giving, 2014

Subsectoral Giving Per Capita

Per capita, Ireland gives most to Religious and Educational organisations.

Per capita, Ireland gave €212 in 2016. Subsectoral differences have been identified when it comes to per capita giving levels, as Figure 19 illustrates. Religion and Education received the highest per capita contribution at €42.53 and €40.29 respectively. Environment received the lowest per capita contribution at €2.24. It is worth noting that per capita giving remains highest for Religion despite a 16% reduction in fundraised income for this subsector.

When extrapolated to depict overall sectoral experience, fundraised income increased in 2016 yielding €1 billion compared to €969 million raised in 2015. Per capita giving increased by €6, to €212. However, giving as a percent of GDP fell from 0.37% to 0.33% year on year. This is attributable to the growth and recovery of the Irish economy.

Tax Incentive to Give

Ireland's tax incentive to give is at odds with practically all developed economies.

It has been consistently found that while Ireland is generous by frequency of giving, monetary giving levels are half that of the U.K. Figure 20 is adapted from a previous version of this report by 2into3 and provides explanations as to this variance (Power et al., 2015: 22).

There are a number of factors which could explain the difference in per capita giving levels in the U.K. and Ireland. Ireland has just 40 charitable Trusts and Foundations, the least amount in Europe (Association of Charitable Foundations, 2007), whereas the U.K. has some 8,800. The giving culture in the U.K. is more developed and there are greater levels of transparency and trust, due in part to a longer period of regulation. The significant difference between the U.K. and Irish tax code in relation to philanthropic giving is one of the factors affecting Irish giving levels.

The level of incentive in Ireland is at odds with not only the U.K. but practically all developed economies. Most countries offer incentives at 100% of the value of income tax; the donor and/or the charity can then claim or be exempt from 100% of the tax that has been paid or would be paid on the amount donated (Charities Aid Foundation, 2016). For example, while in the U.K. the incentive on a £5,000 donation is 100% of the highest rate of tax, in Ireland for a gift of the same level the incentive is 78% of tax paid at the higher rate.

The U.K. also operates a Gift Aid scheme where this incentive is split between the donor and the charity whereas in Ireland only the charity receives the benefit of the incentive.

Ireland is also unusual in being one of the few developed economies which caps the incentive. Most countries, including the U.K., set no annual limit for the value of donation by a taxpayer on which the tax paid is reclaimable.

For Legacy donations, the U.K. offers a specific incentive where 10% or more of an estate is donated there is a 4% reduction on the tax paid on the entire estate. In Ireland no such incentive exists.

Ireland also uses a floor, set at €250, before any incentive applies whereas the U.K. has no minimum level. In fact, no developed economy, apart from Ireland, sets a minimum donation amount (Charities Aid Foundation, 2016).

Incentive to Give

- No personal benefit is available on individual donations in Ireland.
- Tax schemes benefit charities and U.K. donors.
- The value of a Corporate donation is deducted at the corporation rate of tax in Ireland.
- Corporate donations are deducted from total profits before tax in the U.K.

Giving Culture

- Ireland is generous by frequency but U.K. gives more.
- Ireland has just 40 trusts and foundations, the lowest number in Europe and a fraction of the number in the U.K. (Johnson, 2018)
- Legacy giving is standardised in U.K. compared to Ireland.
- U.K. Lottery Funding is a significant source of income compared to Ireland.

Transparency and Trust

- Regulation was established in 2014 in Ireland, 7 years after the U.K.
- 8% of Irish charities used SORP but in the U.K., SORP is mandatory.
- For Ireland and the U.K., there is a need to regain public trust.

Conclusion

This report is designed to provide an overview of the status of the Irish not-for-profit sector in 2016 and responds to an identified need for objective information on fundraising in Ireland. It is intended to stimulate debate to encourage more detailed and transparent reporting of fundraising data.

Although empirical research is essential to identify best practice and to benchmark performance, trustees, CEOs, donors and civil society should bear in mind the diversity between organisations, which is not encompassed in this report. The report found that fundraised income rose 4.5% from 2015, increasing for the seventh consecutive year. The total income generated from philanthropic sources amounted to €1 billion in 2016, with the average cost to raise €1 estimated at 31c. Ireland's giving per capita was €212 in 2016, €183 less than that of the U.K., indicating that even as the sector continues to grow, a substantial margin exists between Ireland and its counterparts, with scope to develop its giving culture by looking to the U.K., New Zealand, and other societies with standardised institutional philanthropy.

While the sector seeks to regain the trust of the general public following the charity scandals of 2014-2015, impact-based language alone will not improve the public's perception of the Irish sector, which has become increasingly negative in recent years. In order for the sector to attain sustainable growth, a mandatory, standardized system of SORP compliance must be implemented.

This report finds the actual behaviours of the sector to go against the rhetoric of increasing transparency and accountability. Given the recovery of the economy, a greater acceleration in giving rates would be expected, particularly when comparing Ireland internationally. Bearing this in mind, it is difficult to escape the conclusion that transparency is actually diminishing, and that the exemplary actions of a select few are simply not enough to bring about the desired and deserved level of advancement of the sector as a whole.
